Deadline for extended abstracts: September 7, 2022

This open call of the 2023 #ISOJ Journal welcomes all papers that clearly deal with original research into online journalism. This includes empirical articles (using quantitative, qualitative, computational and/or mixed methods) and theoretical articles.

#ISOJ Journal, the official research publication of the International Symposium on Online Journalism (<http://isoj.org/research/>), is seeking extended abstracts (up to 1,000 words) to be published in conjunction with the next ISOJ symposium in 2023 as a full paper. A subset of the authors of selected extended abstracts will be asked to send full manuscripts for the conference.

All submitted manuscripts will undergo a blind review process, and the authors of those articles selected for publication also will be invited to present their work at the symposium.

General inquiries about the journal and the submission process should be directed to journal editor and ISOJ research chair Amy Schmitz Weiss at aschmitz@sdsu.edu.

Deadline for extended abstracts: September 7, 2022:

Notices for selected extended abstracts will be sent by October 2022.

- Manuscripts should be no more than 8,000 words, including references, and should be formatted using APA citation style.

- Identification in the text where graphs, tables or multimedia should be placed
- If papers don't meet requirements, they will automatically be disqualified and returned to the author.

- If your article is accepted and you are invited to ISOJ, all travel arrangements must be made by author (plan on two-night stay at minimum) – Note: this is dependent on the global pandemic of COVID-19 and if travel will be permitted at the time of the conference.
- If your article is accepted and you are invited to ISOJ, your article cannot be published in another journal as it will be presented at the ISOJ conference and featured in the ISOJ journal (pending editors' approval).

Note: For papers that are accepted to the conference and journal, authors will not be charged or asked to make a payment in order for their articles to appear in the journal. ISOJ doesn't have article processing charges.
